Introduction

Menu making and meal planning are no longer left to chance in the modern household. We all know too much about food and its effect upon our health and vitality as well as our dispositions and our social life. Added to these, our pocketbooks must never be overlooked. We plan our menus for the week ahead always with an eye to the use of leftovers and to the possibility of unexpected guests and to come out even, we follow a few simple rules. We see to it that there is a quart of milk for every child and a pint for every adult every day with cream and cheese for good measure; that liver is served once a week; that there is an abundance of the red, green and yellow vegetables, salads and fruits, with generous servings of fresh eggs, fish and meat. We know that to serve these effectively we should not repeat the same flavor at the same meal since contrasting flavors make all more enjoyable. We need to assure ourselves that there is varied texture: something soft, something chewy and something crisp, crunchy and fresh. And for the beauty of our table, form and color should not be repeated too often at the same meal unless there is a single color or single design planned.

"What shall we have for dinner tonight?" can be readily decided upon when the homemaker has this book in her hands. Nutrition and variety have been stressed and the recipes are to be found in the preceding cookbooklets. The little numbers refer to the books in which the recipes are to be found.

BREAKFAST CEREALS—Ready-to-serve cereals are prepared from almost all grains—flaked, puffed, shredded or rolled and cooked. These may be served just as they come from the package or they may be heated in the oven. Serve with milk or cream, adding fruit and sugar if desired. Cooked cereals are of 2 types, quick-cooking and those requiring a cooking period of 1 hour or more. The latter may be prepared ahead of time and reheated for serving. Serve with milk or cream and fruit. Hot cereals are particularly desirable during cold weather.

EGGS—Because eggs may be prepared in a great number of ways, they provide opportunity for variety and interest in the breakfast menu. Many people, however, prefer to cook their breakfast eggs in the same way every morning.

The simplest methods of cooking eggs are frying, scrambling, soft cooking and poaching. Fried eggs are often served with bacon or ham. Scrambled eggs may have tomatoes, chopped cooked bacon or ham, cheese, pimientos or other foods mixed with them.

Additional egg dishes are shirred eggs, creamed eggs, omelets and fluffy egg nests. These are especially suitable for Sunday breakfasts when one usually has more leisure for the preparation and enjoyment of the meal.

BREADS—Breakfast breads are usually hot and freshly made. Sweet rolls and coffee cakes, however, are as often served cold as hot. Toast, dry or buttered, is the simplest breakfast bread. Others are biscuits, hot rolls, waffles, pancakes, doughnuts, fruit turnovers, muffins and popovers. These are made of a variety of flours: wheat, whole-wheat, graham, corn, rye, bran, oats and rice. Fruit and meat are often added: blueberries, cranberries, bananas, apples, blackberries, raisins, currants, dried prunes and apricots, cheese, crisp bacon, cracklings and jelly.

SWEETS—Jams, jellies, marmalades, sirups and honey are often served at breakfast, particularly with hot breads.

BEVERAGES—A hot beverage is a valuable stimulant at breakfast time. For children, this is usually a drink made almost entirely of milk. Adults often prefer coffee, tea or a cereal beverage.
